The story centers around a young woman named Sarah who is struggling with her bipolar disorder. She has always been able to keep her illness under control, but recently her symptoms have started to spiral out of control. She is experiencing hallucinations, delusions, and paranoia.

As her illness worsens, Sarah becomes increasingly isolated from her friends and family. She starts to believe that people are out to get her, and she becomes convinced that she is in danger.

One night, Sarah's fears come true when she is attacked by a stranger. She is brutally beaten and left for dead. Miraculously, Sarah survives the attack, but she is traumatized by the experience.

In the aftermath of the attack, Sarah's illness spirals out of control. She becomes even more isolated and paranoid, and she begins to experience violent hallucinations. She is convinced that the stranger is still after her, and she is terrified for her life.

Sarah's family and friends are desperate to help her, but they don't know how. They try to get her to see a therapist, but she refuses. They try to convince her that she is not in danger, but she doesn't believe them.

As Sarah's illness worsens, she becomes a danger to herself and others. She starts to lash out at her friends and family, and she even threatens to kill herself.

Sarah is desperate for help, but she doesn't know where to turn. She is trapped in a downward spiral, and she doesn't know how to stop it.

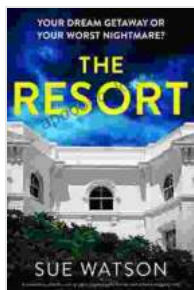

The ending of this book is heart-stopping. It is a twist that you will not see coming, and it will leave you reeling. This is a must-read for fans of psychological thrillers.
