The Origins of a Passion

Keisuke Yasuhara's fascination with dogs began at a young age, growing up in a household surrounded by these loyal companions. His love for animals, combined with his artistic talent, led him to explore unique ways to express his passion.

In the early 2000s, Yasuhara stumbled upon the technique of beadwork, known as "wanco" in Japanese. Intrigued by its possibilities, he began experimenting with creating small dog sculptures, using beads to depict their intricate details and distinctive features.

Word of Yasuhara's remarkable creations quickly spread, and in 2006, he held his first solo exhibition in Tokyo. The overwhelming response to his Wancobeads cemented his status as a rising star in the art world, and soon, collectors and dog enthusiasts alike were clamoring to acquire his unique works.

Dogs of France: A Celebration of Gallic Charm

Among Yasuhara's most beloved creations is his "Dogs of France" series, which pays homage to the rich canine heritage of France. From the majestic Berger Picard to the adorable Bouledogue Francais, each sculpture captures the essence of these beloved breeds with remarkable precision.

Yasuhara's ability to convey the personality and spirit of each dog through his beadwork is truly astonishing. The playful twinkle in a French Bulldog's eyes, the dignified stance of a Briard, and the graceful curves of a Petit Basset Griffon Vendéen—every detail is rendered with meticulous care and attention.

Art that Enchants

Keisuke Yasuhara's Wancobeads Dogs of France are not merely decorative objects; they are works of art that inspire joy, wonder, and conversation. Their whimsical nature and intricate craftsmanship make them a delight to behold, evoking a sense of nostalgia and timeless charm.

Whether displayed as a centerpiece in your living room, a treasured collectible in your home office, or a thoughtful gift for a dog lover, a Wancobead Dog of France is sure to bring a smile to your face and spark endless admiration.

Preserving a Timeless Tradition

Keisuke Yasuhara's Wancobeads Dogs of France are not only works of art but also a testament to the enduring tradition of beadwork. This ancient craft, passed down through generations, has been reinvigorated by Yasuhara's unique vision and artistry.

Through his sculptures, Yasuhara pays homage to the skilled artisans who have kept this tradition alive for centuries. His work not only celebrates the beauty of dogs but also preserves a valuable cultural heritage for future generations.
