

Promise Broken: The Promises That We Make and the Ones That We Break

We all make promises. To ourselves, to our loved ones, to our friends, to our colleagues. Some promises are small and easily forgotten. Others are big and life-changing. But all promises have one thing in common: they create expectations.

When we break a promise, we not only disappoint the person we made it to, we also damage our own self-trust. We may start to doubt our own ability to keep our word, and we may become less likely to make promises in the future.
