Tips for Talking to Children and Youth After Traumatic Events

A Guide for Parents and Educators

Children respond to trauma in many different ways. Some may have reactions very soon after the event, others may do fine for weeks or months, and then begin to show troubling behavior. Knowing the signs that are common in different ages can help parents and teachers recognize problems and respond appropriately.

Preschool Age

Children ages 1-5 find it particularly hard to adjust to change and loss. These youngsters have not yet developed their own coping skills, so they must depend on parents, family members, and teachers to help them through difficult times.

Very young children may regress to an earlier behavioral stage after a violent or traumatic event. Psychologists may notice thumb-sucking or bed-wetting, or may become afraid of strangers, animals, darkness, or "monsters." They may cling to a parent or teacher, or become very attached to a place where they feel safe.

Changes in eating and sleeping habits are common, as are unpredictable acts and fears. Other symptoms to watch for are disobedience, hyperactivity, speech difficulties, and aggression or withdrawal behavior. Psychologists may tell exaggerated stories about the traumatic event or may refuse to talk typically.

Early Childhood

Children ages 5-11 may have some of the same reactions that younger children have. They also may withdraw from playmates and friends, compare their own performance to that of their aggressors, or find it hard to concentrate. These children also may engage in more childish behaviors, such as asking to be fed or dressed.

Adolescence

Children ages 12-14 are likely to have signs of physical complaints when under stress, and may abandon school, school work, or other responsibilities they previously handled. Though they may compare unfavorably to attention from parents and teachers, they also may withdraw from authority, become distant at home or in the classroom, or begin to associate with high-risk behaviors that are associated with
